Skilled immigration and the competitiveness of the European Union: attractiveness and policy options

Olena Oliinyk - 03 Feb 2026

The European Union faces increased global competition to attract highly skilled workers, who are essential to innovation and economic competitiveness. To address this, on 29 January it launched a new strategy to develop Europe's talent pool and become more attractive than other global hubs for skilled immigration. Strengthening Europe's attractiveness therefore means better integrating skilled immigration into innovation, employment and international partnership policies and simplifying the rules and processes for attracting the talent and skills Europe needs to strengthen the competitiveness of the European economy.

■ Front page! :

The real danger: that Europeans will repeat American arguments about their inevitable decline.

Europe has structural advantages that are comparable to, or even superior to, those of the United States, based not on the display of its power, but on the size of its market, the strength of its structures and its long-term resilience. While challenges remain and should not be ignored, they do not justify fatalism or political renunciation. It is therefore up to leaders and citizens alike to convince themselves of this in order to reaffirm, without complexes, a singular but effective power on the international stage. Read more

■ Commission :

Visa and migration strategy

On 29 January, the European Commission presented its visa and migration strategy. The visa strategy consists of strengthening the Union's security by modernising the visa waiver system, introducing new digital procedures, and attracting more students, researchers and highly skilled workers. The migration strategy aims to prevent illegal migration and put an end to the activities of criminal smuggling networks, protect people fleeing war and persecution while preventing abuse of the system, and attract talent to the EU in order to strengthen the competitiveness of the European economy. Second wave of defence funding under the SAFE instrument

On 26 January, the European Commission authorised a second wave of national funding under the Security Action for Europe (SAFE) defence instrument. It aims to provide financial assistance to Estonia, Greece, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Slovakia and Finland. These eight Member States will be eligible for approximately €74 billion after the loan agreements have been signed. Read more

■ Parliament :

Commemoration of Holocaust victims

On 27 January, German President Frank-Walter Steinmeier attended the International Holocaust Remembrance Day ceremony, marking the 81st anniversary of the liberation of Auschwitz-Birkenau. He reiterated the importance of remembering the millions of victims of the Nazi regime and the need to combat anti-Semitism and all forms of hatred. The day concluded with a testimony by Tova Friedman, a Holocaust survivor, who spoke before the Bundestag about the importance of keeping the memory of survivors alive in the European consciousness. MEPs also commemorated this anniversary in the presence of Tatiana Bucci, a Holocaust survivor. Read more - Other link

■ Council :

Meeting of Ministers for Agriculture and Fisheries

On 26 January, the Ministers for Agriculture and Fisheries welcomed the European Commission's proposal on organic farming, which aims to avoid unnecessary red tape and increased costs so as to promote greater competitiveness in the sector with third countries. The Cypriot Presidency gave assurances that it would promote a fair, competitive and sustainable primary production sector within the framework of the common agricultural policy and the common fisheries policy. They stressed the need not to compromise food security and to harmonise as well as simplify the rules and procedures applicable within the framework of the Union's bioeconomy strategy. ■ Trilogues :

Increasing the effectiveness of the Union's external action

On 26 January, negotiators from the Council and the European Parliament reached an agreement on targeted amendments to the regulation establishing the European Neighbourhood, Development and International Cooperation Instrument. The aim is to increase the effectiveness of the Union's external action through more efficient use of budgetary guarantee resources, optimised risk coverage (via the European Investment Bank), lighter obligations for large-scale private investments and new guarantees for the least developed countries. ■ Diplomacy :

Foreign Affairs Ministers' Meeting

On 29 January, Foreign Affairs Ministers discussed the decision to add Russia to the list of countries at risk of money laundering and discussed the 20th package of sanctions against it. They then continued their work on the €90 billion loan to Ukraine. On the Middle East, ministers reached agreement on designating Iran's Revolutionary Guards as a terrorist organisation and emphasised the need for the European Union to step up its involvement in the Gaza peace plan through civilian missions. Finally, they discussed how to remedy the deteriorating humanitarian situation in the Great Lakes region, particularly in the east of the Democratic Republic of Congo. Read more

Strategic partnership with Vietnam

On 29 January, European Council President António Costa and Vietnamese President Luong Cuong officially announced the elevation of relations between Vietnam and the European Union to a comprehensive strategic partnership, 35 years after the establishment of diplomatic relations. In a joint statement, they committed to closer cooperation in all areas, including trade and investment, sustainable development, climate and energy, digital transformation, security issues and cooperation in multilateral forums. Strategic Partnership Agreement with India

On 27 January, Commission President Ursula von der Leyen, Council President António Costa and Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi announced the conclusion of a Strategic Partnership Agreement at the 16th EU-India Summit in New Delhi. It includes a free trade agreement that significantly reduces Indian customs duties on European vehicles and wines. In return, European customs duties on Indian imports of textiles, electronic products and pharmaceuticals, among other items, will be reduced. The leaders also signed a partnership agreement on security and defence. Finally, they formulated a joint strategic agenda for 2030 structured around prosperity and sustainability, technology and innovation, and security and defence. Read more - Other link

■ European Agencies :

New launch contract with Arianespace

On 27 January, the European Union Agency for the Space Programme signed a new launch contract with Arianespace for the deployment of the second pair of second-generation Galileo satellites. It will be launched aboard an Ariane 6 launcher, thereby strengthening Europe's strategic autonomy. The second-generation Galileo satellites will enable the European Union's satellite navigation system to remain a world-class navigation system serving citizens, businesses and public authorities across Europe and around the world. Mette Frederiksen and Jens-Frederik Nielsen in Berlin and Paris

On 27 and 28 January, Danish Prime Minister Mette Frederiksen visited Berlin and Paris, together with her Greenlandic counterpart, Jens-Frederik Nielsen. On the 27th, they met with German Chancellor Friedrich Merz, who reiterated Germany's solidarity with Denmark and Greenland in their disagreement with the United States. On the 28th, they were hosted at the Élysée Palace by French President Emmanuel Macron, who confirmed European solidarity and France's support for Denmark and Greenland, their sovereignty, and territorial integrity. According to him, the current situation is a strategic wake-up call for all of Europe. Read more

■ The Netherlands :

Coalition agreement for a minority government in the Netherlands

On 27 January, three Dutch political parties agreed to form a minority government. Rob Jetten, leader of the centrist D66 (Democrats 66) party, is set to become Prime Minister, three months after his surprise victory in the general election on 29 October. He has formed an alliance with the centre-right CDA (Christian Democratic Appeal) and the liberal VVD (People's Party for Freedom and Democracy). Together, they hold 66 of the 150 seats in the lower house and 22 of the 75 seats in the upper house. He could take office by the end of February. The three parties have unveiled their programmes: significant investment in defence and security, cuts in public spending on social services, the holding of a summit on asylum and the resolution of the housing crisis. ■ Moldova :

Maia Sandu addresses the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe

On 26 January, Moldovan President Maia Sandu addressed the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, speaking of the threats that Europe faces. In her view, European democracy is facing two interrelated wars: Russia's aggression in Ukraine and a hybrid war characterised by disinformation, cyberattacks and external interference in democracies. She described the Council of Europe as a 'line of defence' against these situations and recalled the threat that Russia's war poses to Moldova. She also stressed the need for a clear and comprehensive legal instrument on information manipulation and foreign interference. Read more

■ Studies/Reports :

Changing tactics in cocaine trafficking operations

On 27 January, Europol published a report on changing tactics in cocaine trafficking operations to Europe via maritime routes. Cocaine trafficking in Europe has reached unprecedented levels, driven by high production in Latin America and growing demand within the European Union. Criminal networks have demonstrated their ability to rapidly adjust operations, fragment routes and adopt complex and covert trafficking methods. Europol's response to the threat of cocaine trafficking includes operational support through its specialised drugs unit, analytical and coordination support, and the deployment of experts in the field. Single Market Report

On 30 January, the European Commission adopted the 2026 Single Market and Competitiveness Report. It is based on 29 performance indicators covering areas such as market integration and barriers, electricity prices and investment trends. Indicators that remained stable include labour productivity (measured in GDP per hour worked), ease of regulatory compliance (measured by business surveys) and private and public expenditure on research and development as a percentage of GDP, etc. Read more - Other link - Other link

Monitoring and recording antisemitism in the European Union

On 27 January, the European Agency for Fundamental Rights published a report highlighting persistent gaps in the monitoring and recording of antisemitic acts in Europe. These shortcomings, caused by differences between Member States in the classification and recording of incidents, make comparisons and analyses difficult and undoubtedly hamper the fight against antisemitism in the European Union. To remedy this, the Agency has formulated clear guidelines, specialised training for law enforcement agencies and enhanced cooperation with civil society to encourage reporting and obtain robust data that reflects the reality of the phenomenon. ■ Culture :

The Rediscovered Treasure of the Sun King

Until 8 February, the Grand Palais will be open to the public for the exceptional exhibition 'The Rediscovered Treasure of the Sun King', devoted to the artistic splendour of Louis XIV's reign. It showcases a spectacular collection of monumental tapestries, which had been dispersed in various locations as the centuries went by. Now for the first time they are on display together as they were originally intended. By showcasing this rare legacy, the exhibition aims to help the general public appreciate the central role played by the decorative arts in forging the image of royal power. By combining scientific rigour with an immersive display, the Grand Palais shows its commitment to making art history engaging, accessible and a source of national pride. Read more

The Carpathians take centre stage in Warsaw

Until 30 June, the Museum of Ethnography in Warsaw is hosting a unique exhibition on the artistic achievements of the Lemko ethnic community from the Carpathians. It showcases renowned artists such as Andy Warhol, as well as others who have never been exhibited before, and brings visibility to their artistic heritage, which has often been marginalised.
