

Alexander Van der Bellen is elected President of the Republic of Austria

Corinne Deloy

Abstract:

Former spokesperson for the ecologist party (1997-2008), Alexander Van der Bellen (Die Grüne - DG) finally won the 2nd round of the presidential election in Austria on 23rd May after a tense 24 h wait. He won 50.3% of the vote against 49.7% for Norbert Hofer (FPÖ), who drew ahead in the 1st round on 24th April (35.1% of the vote against 21.3% for Alexander Van der Bellen).

Results

On 22nd May, Norbert Hofer had won 51.9% of the vote and had 144,006 votes more than his ecologist rival. Therefore the remaining 885,437 postal votes still had to be sorted, representing no less than 14% of the electorate. The latter who had chosen to vote by post gave 61% of their votes to the ecologist candidate and therefore tilted the presidential election in support of Alexander Van der Bellen.

Even for the FPÖ, undoubtedly one of the most powerful populist movements in Europe, it remains difficult to date to win an election that is governed by the majority vote.

Turnout totalled 72.70% i.e. + 4.2 points more than in the 1st round on 24th April.

THE LEAP MADE BY CIVIL SOCIETY

Alexander Van der Bellen benefited then from the Republican front mounted by civil society, which does not exist within the Austrian political classes. Between 2000 and 2007 the People's Party (ÖVP) and the FPÖ governed together, the SPÖ and the FPÖ did the same between 1983 and 1986.

According to a poll by the daily Die Presse 40% of Alexander Van der Bellen's voters supported him in effect to form a block against Norbert Hofer. After reminding his fellow countrymen that the "folly of nationalism" had caused Austria's ruin, the ecologist candidate declared, "I hope that all of my supporters will vote and also those who don't like me that much but think that I would make a better President of the Republic than my rival."

Presidential elections in Austria 24th April , 22nd May and 4th December

The replacement of Chancellor Werner Faymann (SPÖ) by Christian Kern (SPÖ) on 17th May last undoubtedly helped Alexander Van der Bellen.

«The mobilisation of the abstentionists will decide the outcome, » indicated Christoph Hofinger, an analyst for the pollster SORA on 24th April. According to an exit poll by SORA the abstentionists in the 1st round were effectively decisive in the victory of the ecologist candidate. 200,000 of the 330,000 people who did not vote on 24th April voted for Van der Bellen on 22nd May. The latter also benefited from the transfer of votes over from independent candidate Imgard Griss, former judge at the Supreme Court, and from SPÖ. Finally the SORA poll showed that most men voted for Norbert Hofer whilst a majority of women chose Alexander Van der Bellen. The latter also took most of the votes of those living in towns and the most qualified.

DEFEAT SHAPED LIKE VICTORY

In spite of his defeat, this presidential election is a source of satisfaction for the FPÖ which won the best score in its history to date. Norbert Hofer came out ahead of his rival in 6 of the 9 Länder that make up Austria.

Austria seems to be more divided than ever before with half of the electorate prepared to give their vote to a populist party. The FPÖ has taken advantage of hostility against the establishment, and more widely of the malaise expressed by a majority of Austrians who wonder what the future holds for them and their children, about their place in the world and who foresee that tomorrow their lives will be more difficult than today. "Whoever the winner is, this election is already the greatest victory for the FPÖ nationally since one voters in two voted for him," stressed Reinhard Heinisch, political expert from the University of Salzburg.

Heinz-Christian Strache's accession to the Chancellery after the next general elections planned for in 2018 seems now no longer impossible. "This electoral campaign was an investment for the future", said Norbert Hofer quite rightly.
