

European
Elections monitor

Helen Levy

RESULTS

António José Seguro elected President of Portugal

Despite violent storms that hit Portugal in recent days and calls for the election to be postponed, the second round of the presidential election was held on February 8. The Portuguese elected António José Seguro, who will succeed Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa. The latter has served two five-year terms and cannot run again. With 66.82% of the vote, he won by a large margin over André Ventura, who garnered 33.18%. Voter turnout was 50.11%.

António José Seguro will become the sixth president of the Third Republic, established after Portugal's return to democracy following the Salazar dictatorship in 1976.

This result can be explained by a significant transfer of votes from supporters of Henrique Gouveia e Melo (independent, 12.32% in the first round) and Luís Marques Mendes (Social Democrat, 11.3%), as well as those who had initially voted for João Cotrim de Figueiredo (Liberal, 16%).

On January 18, after the first round, António José Seguro (center-left (PS)) called on "all democrats, all progressives, and all humanists" to vote for him on February 8 in order to defeat 'extremism' and "those who sow hatred and division among the Portuguese." He also emphasized his independence, stating that his candidacy was not that of a particular party, but that of democracy, and it seems that the electorate heard this message.

During a televised debate that took place between the two rounds on January 27, the gap between the two candidates was palpable. Although nothing new was brought to the discussion during the 75-minute program, André Ventura was combative and António Seguro more measured, appealing to the center-left and more moderate conservatives. André Ventura emphasized crime rates and immigration, while António Seguro emphasized constitutional continuity and stability.

Despite this defeat, André Ventura has made a rapid breakthrough in the political landscape with his populist Chega! (Enough!) movement since its creation six years ago, becoming the main opposition party with the aim of overthrowing the centre-right Social Democratic Party (PSD). As the second round approached, he attempted to capitalize on voter discontent by highlighting rising housing costs, low wages, and what he considers "excessive" immigration. His rise to power should serve as a warning to the moderate right, as this election may be seen as a test of how many votes he could rally to his name. With this election, the Portuguese have strengthened their democracy by preferring "a familiar institutional figure to a polarizing challenger." This also echoes the continued rise of other far-right populist movements in several European countries.

The challenge for the new president will now be to coexist with a minority government led by the PSD (Luis Montenegro), elected in the 2025 parliamentary elections (the third in three years). Luis Montenegro relies on a delicate balance between support from the right and the left to keep his government in power. The question is whether António Seguro will be able to help or hinder him in this task. Although normally an impartial figure with no executive power, the President of Portugal remains influential. He can veto bills presented to parliament (although this can be reversed) and, as a last resort, he can dissolve parliament.

Presidential election in Portugal

8th February 2026

02

Results of the second round of the presidential election on 8 February 2026 in Portugal

Turnout: 50.11%

| Candidates  | Number of votes won in the 1st round | % of votes won in the 1st round | Number of votes won in the 2nd round | % of votes won in the 2nd round |
|---|--------------------------------------|---------------------------------|--------------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| Antonio Jose Seguro (Socialist Party, PS)          | 1 754 892                            | 31.11                           | 3 482 481                            | 66.82%                          |
| Andre Ventura (Chega!, CH)                         | 1 326 643                            | 23.52                           | 1 729 381                            | 33.18%                          |
| Joao Cotrim Figueiredo (Liberal Initiative, IL)    | 902 562                              | 16                              |                                      |                                 |
| Henrique Gouveia e Melo (independent)              | 695 088                              | 12.32                           |                                      |                                 |
| Luis Marques Mendes (Social Democratic Party, PSD) | 637 391                              | 11.30                           |                                      |                                 |
| Catarina Martins (Left Bloc, BE)                   | 116 302                              | 2.06                            |                                      |                                 |
| Antonio Filipe (Portuguese Communist Party, PCP)   | 92 589                               | 1.64                            |                                      |                                 |
| Manuel Joao Vieira (independent)                   | 60 898                               | 1.08                            |                                      |                                 |
| Jorge Pinto (Free, L)                              | 38 536                               | 0.68                            |                                      |                                 |
| André Pestana (independent)                        | 10 893                               | 0.19                            |                                      |                                 |
| Humberto Correia (independent)                     | 4 622                                | 0.08                            |                                      |                                 |

Source : <https://www.presidenciais2026.mai.gov.pt/resultados/globais>

Antonio José Seguro, 63, is originally from Penamacor, in the central region of the country on the Spanish border. From an early age, he took an interest in politics and studied international relations at the Autonomous University of Lisbon. He joined the Socialist Party and was first elected to Parliament in 1991. From 1999 to 2001, he was a Member of the European Parliament. He then held various positions in several governments, notably under António Guterres. He became president of the Socialist Party in 2011. In 2014, after being challenged by António Costa for the party leadership and losing to him, he resigned and withdrew from political life. It was not until 2024 that his interest in the presidency was rekindled, after he began working as a political commentator for CNN Portugal. The new president will be sworn in on 9 March, just before the spring legislative session.

You can read all of our publications on our site :

www.robert-schuman.eu

Publishing Director : Pascale JOANNIN

The opinions expressed in this text are the sole responsibility of the author.

© All rights reserved, Fondation Robert Schuman, 2026

THE FONDATION ROBERT SCHUMAN, created in 1991 and acknowledged by State decree in 1992, is the main French research centre on Europe. It develops research on the European Union and its policies and promotes the content of these in France, Europe and abroad. It encourages, enriches and stimulates European debate thanks to its research, publications and the organisation of conferences. The Foundation is presided over by Mr. Jean-Dominique Giuliani.